

Argos Risk Interviewed in Forrester Research as Viable Third-Party Risk Intelligence (TPRI) Solution

Third-Party Risk Intelligence emerges as a 2018 trend due to worsening market volatility, increased cyber threats, and external non-financial factors, such as devastating hurricanes and data breaches. A constantly altering risk landscape is forcing risk professionals to manage third-party risk at a whole new level.

MINNEAPOLIS, November 28, 2017 -- Argos Risk, specialists in providing Third-Party Risk Management services for managing and monitoring B2B health and credit risk, is pleased to announce they were included in this year's Forrester Research report. Forrester is highly respected and provides comprehensive research and insights. A few of the previous research documents included Assess Your GRC Program with Forrester's GRC Maturity Model and The Forrester Wave: Digital Risk Monitoring.

"We are very excited about the opportunity to be included in their recent publication addressing Third-Party Risk Intelligence (TPRI). Their extensive research provides immense value and points out the market volatility, increased cyber threats, and external non-financial factors forces risk professionals to manage third-party risk at a whole new level," said Lori Frank, Argos Risk President and CEO.

Frank continues, "As trends continue and businesses need better third-party risk context faster, demand for our services continues to increase." Third-Party Risk Intelligence (TPRI) solutions go beyond internal assessments and fill the gaps with external information including in-depth environmental and market factors which are updated in real-time.
